College isn't college without YOU.

It's not unusual to hear that UMass Boston has no social life and that the students of UMass Boston only come to campus to go to class. That may be the case for some, but it's not the attitude that defines our campus.

Many students work hard to plan events, giveaways and other opportunities to increase socialization on campus. There's the desire for a unified social body, and this year, the desire started blossoming into a welcome reality. Shedding the public's perception of a campus focused on "eat-class-work-sleep-repeat," UMass Boston is becoming known for its drive to learn, work and succeed, all while having a little bit of fun.

We are no longer "just a commuter school." We are no longer a group of faceless students moving back and forth between buildings. This graduating class has helped UMass Boston cast off the belief that attending this school leaves you as nothing more than a face in the crowd. In fact, our students are more unique than ever.

UMass Boston is nothing without its students. UMass Boston would have been nothing without you.

Office of Student Leadership

The OSLCE introduced its new student engagement structure titled The L.E.A.D. Experience on Nov. 12, 2009. The program, which stands for “Leadership Engagement Action Development,” is a three-stage program, allows UMass Boston students to get involved wherever they see fit.

Stage one of the program is “discovering the leader within”; stage two is “involving yourself in the community”; and stage three is “responding as a citizen”. Within each stage there are separate programs to help develop students’ experience as a leader “to be successful in today’s global society.”

OSLCE had prize giveaways during the week to ring in The L.E.A.D. Experience and introduced a new program called the LeaderShape Institute, which falls under step three of the L.E.A.D. Experience.

The Women's Center Presents The Vagina Monologues

UMass Boston's Women's Center put on a production of Eve Ensler's "The Vagina Monologues" on April 16 and 17. The center puts on a production of "Monologues" each year, rotating the pieces delivered by performers and donating the costs of tickets to Boston-area women's shelters and women's advocacy organizations.

RIGHT: Connie Chan, Associate Dean of the McCormack Graduate School of Public Policy, in the midst of describing a woman's act of cutting her husband's braid off in the monologue "Crooked Braid." Chan's monologue was from the point of view of a Native American woman who was constantly abused by her adulterous husband.

BELOW: Senior Vanessa Pollis takes the lead in the monologue "A Six Year Old Girl Was Asked," with narrator Elizabeth Piza. The most distinct question Pollis answered from the six year old's point of view was "What does your vagina smell like?" The answer, of course, was "Snowflakes."

LEFT: In the midst of chanting the oft-forbidden "c-word," senior Hayley Goff encourages the crowd to yell with her at the beginning of her monologue "Reclaiming C-nt." Just as it sounds, Goff's monologue dealt with one woman's tale to own the word as opposed to being oppressed by it.

ABOVE: Juniors Molly Gurley-Broudo and Lindsay Nicolucci and senior Meaghan Tighe answer the questions "What would your vagina wear?" and "What would your vagina say?" during their scene.

RIGHT: Sophomore Sianna Miller and Marta Ortiz counter each other's dialogue in the scene "My Vagina Was My Village." Ortiz's part was a happy-go-lucky woman whereas Miller's part was that of a woman who had been violated multiple times in a war-ravaged zone.

LEFT: Leah Fraumeni filled the shoes of a woman who had never seen her own vagina and had not had a proper orgasm in the monologue "The Vagina Workshop." She described the experience as "better than the Grand Canyon."

BELOW LEFT: Junior Melanie Robinson shows the shock a woman felt when a lover asked her to leave the lights on while having sex during her monologue "Because He Liked to Look at It." Clearly, he enjoyed looking at it.

BELOW RIGHT: UMass Boston graduate Chelsea Hack delivers the first monologue of the evening, titled "Hair." Hack's monologue was the tale of a woman's dismay at her former husband's infatuation with the removal of her pubic hair.

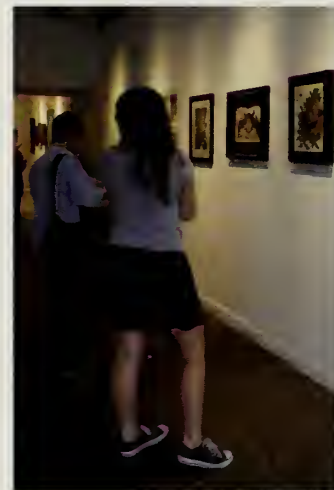

Harbor Art Gallery

Tattooed Campus

Harbor Art Gallery's first show of the school year was titled "Drawing Outside the Line: The Fine Art of Tattoos" and featured not only tattoo designs but the fine artwork of tattoo artists from the Boston area. Eight local artists put up work in the show, which opened on Sept. 15, 2009 and ran until Oct. 25.

Harbor Art Gallery curator Steven Pirrello chose to focus on tattoos for the first show as something that was relatable to many and as something that would resonate across the student body.

Gentrification Photodocumentary

Photos, installation pieces and custom graffiti adorned the walls of the HAG for "From Barrio to Scene," a collection of artwork curated by gallery employee Diego Gomez. The show featured work by five UMass Boston students and one UMass Boston professor.

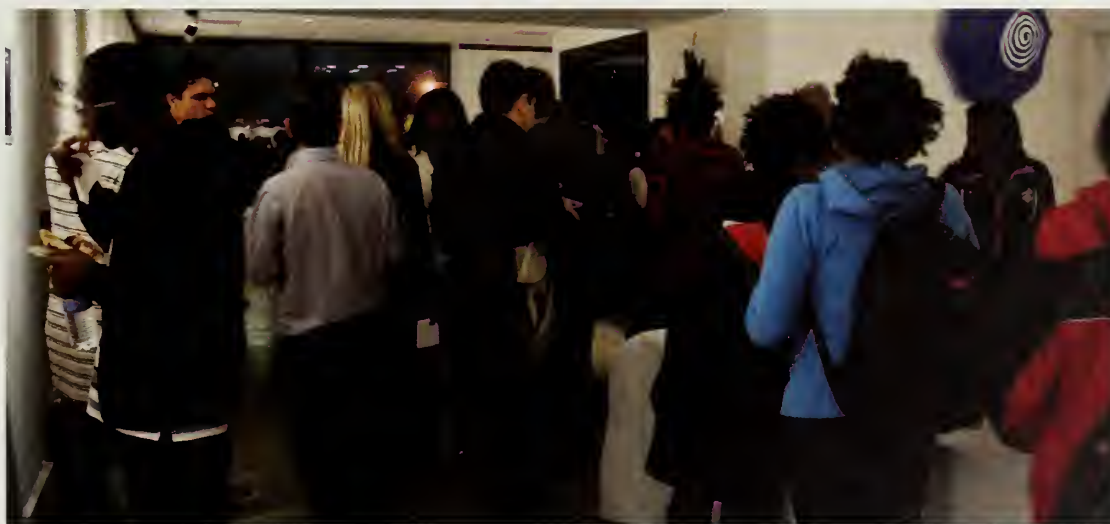

The show featured work that the students collected on gentrification in neighborhoods of New York City and Boston while working with the Latino Leadership Opportunities Program offered through the Gaston Institute. The graffiti was painted by two local artists specifically for this show. It ran from Oct. 7-29, 2009.

Bren Bataclan: Baha

Local artist Bren Bataclan brought two series of paintings with him to the Harbor Art Gallery in March of 2010. This series, titled "Baha", depicted the September, 2009 floods of the Philippines and the "heroism, strength and resilience shared by the Filipino people in the face of natural disaster," according to curator Steven Pirrello.

The reception, held on March 11, 2010, had Bataclan's artwork for sale, with a portion of the proceeds donated to the Red Cross to assist the Philippines and Haiti.

The Smile Project

Bataclan's pieces in the back room of the gallery featured paintings from his "Smile Project." He has worked on this project for seven years, which includes 150 cartoon monsters that he leaves around Boston for people to take, so long as they smile at a stranger. He has expanded the project to more than 25 countries and 25 states.

The exhibit also featured new plush toys based on the paintings he leaves around the city.

African Night 2010

UMass Boston's African Student Union hosted African Night 2010, held on April 24, to allow students and members of the community to experience the diversity and the beauty of the African culture through dance, cuisine, music, fashion and theater.

The event focused on the idea of "unification of the cradle of creation" and featured Donald George, the international coordinator at Amistad America, as a guest speaker. Students sold t-shirts outside the performance to raise funds and awareness of the continuing fight with HIV and AIDS.

Westboro Baptist Church

On World AIDS Day, December 1, of 2009, the evangelical members of the Westboro Baptist Church from Kansas picketed an AIDS awareness event held at UMass Boston. Not a group to stand for intolerance, many members of the UMass Boston student body gathered with signs and chants and protested the protests of the WBC.

Easily outnumbering the members of the church, the students of UMass Boston appeared to be in better spirits than the WBC, who eventually left to picket outside of Brookline High School later in the afternoon due to the town's large Jewish population.

The Legacy of Edward M. Kennedy

BY LILLY O'FLAHERTY

originally published in fall 2009 edition of Lux magazine

He was born at St. Margaret's hospital in Dorchester, Massachusetts and grew up to become one of the most respected and influential legislators in United States history. He earned the nickname the "Lion of the Senate," for his perseverance and long tenure. He was able to work across the political divide, uniting Democrats and Republicans in compromise to pass over 300 bills into law. Championing such causes as Civil Rights, education and immigration reform, health care, and raising the minimum wage; Senator Edward M. Kennedy built his career on advancing social and economic justice. As community members of a public higher-learning institution, we have him to thank for many of the measures that make UMass Boston an institution that is accessible financially and academically to everyone. In addition, his legacy now continues after his death with the establishment of The Edward M. Kennedy Institute for the United States Senate, which will be housed adjacent to the J. F. K. Presidential Library at Columbia Point.

During his lifetime, Senator Kennedy had a hand in the creation of almost every major federal student-aid program, establishing the Pell Grant in 1972 and constantly offering budget amendments to increase its maximum award. He conceived of the federal direct-loan program in which the government loans students money directly through their colleges, and remained one of its most loyal supporters throughout his time in the Senate. Kennedy faced opposition to direct lending from Republicans who thought it fiscally irresponsible, but in 2007, Congress passed a Kennedy-approved bill that cut out lender subsidies from the bank-based guaranteed loan program and funneled the savings to federal student aid.

Kennedy co-sponsored Title IX of the Education Amendments, a 1972 law that banned sex-discrimination at institutions receiving federal funds and led to a huge increase in women's involvement in college sports. When he became chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee in 1987, Kennedy first sought to override the 1984 Supreme Court ruling, Grove City College v. Bell which found that gender-equity was only applicable in programs directly receiving aid, not institution-wide. Kennedy's bill was passed into law in 1988, forcing institutions utilizing federal aid to comply with the law across the board. He also went against the Bush administration's plan to eliminate TRIO college preparatory programs, which includes such initiatives as Upward Bound, arguing that equal opportunity for a college education is a cornerstone of democracy.

The Edward M. Kennedy Institute for the United States Senate, Kennedy's lasting legacy, is a project that's been in the works for several years but gained in momentum after the Senator was diagnosed with an inoperable brain tumor in May 2008. The Institute, slated to open sometime next year on Columbia Point, will occupy 40,000 square feet of space adjacent to the JFK Library, and will house a museum and exhibit spaces, classrooms, and a reception area. A digital library will allow access to senate archives in libraries across the U.S. as well as Senator Kennedy's records. The Institute will be devoted to educating and inspiring the public about civic engagement, and will open its doors to students, teachers, Senators, and Senate staff, providing an outlet for hands-on instruction in the many aspects of the Senate and government. The Institute also hopes to work closely with teachers to develop and implement related curriculum and plans to offer a "Summer Senate," for high-schoolers, in which "two students from each state will come to the Institute each year to study a topic, hold mock hearings, draft legislation, and debate the topic." The choice to build his namesake institution at Columbia Point, near the University of Massachusetts, Boston, the Massachusetts Archives, and the JFK Library is not happenstance for Peter Meade, CEO and President of the Institute. Mr. Meade graciously agreed to speak with me over the phone about his relationship with Senator Kennedy, plans for the Institute, and how it will embody the values and ideals he upheld throughout his career. Mr. Meade and I spoke the day after he moderated a debate, held at the J. F. K. Presidential Library, for Senator Kennedy's replacement in the United States Senate.

Interview with Peter Meade,
President and CEO of the Edward
M. Kennedy Institute for the United States Senate

BY LILLY O'FLAHERTY

How did you know the late senator?

I worked on his 1980 campaign, I coordinated public safety in school desegregation in the mid 1970s and got to know him fairly well then. I am also the Chair of the Rose Kennedy Greenway Conservancy, something the senator asked me to do. I know [his wife] Vicky and our two families have become very close over the years.

How do you hope to embrace Senator Kennedy's life work and mission with the Institute?

There are three hallmarks of his life that we need to emulate: One, he always did his homework. They always say he was the best prepared in the room. The second is, he had a real capacity to listen to and understand people with opposing points of view. And third, he knew how to get it done. Once he shook your hand and promised something, you knew it would happen. He was a completely trustworthy person.

How will the Institute influence the political and academic climate of Massachusetts?

We hope to reach Massachusetts as well as the entire country. We hope to teach the values that Senator Kennedy upheld, of reaching across the aisle and understanding other people and their positions. Senator Kennedy wanted the institute to be a very important teaching institution. He wanted to teach young people how a functioning democracy works. We hope to continue that mission.

How much work has been done on specific programs?

We definitely are not going to wait for the building to be complete to conduct programming. We will have an online presence before the building is done.

How will the design of the building reflect the ideals or goals of the institute?

Well, we want it to be an important part of the university. We want it to be a welcoming building that encourages people to come there. We'll have classrooms, lectures and some classes that will be taught there. I'm thrilled about the opportunities for students to work here on particular programs, having university faculty participate in panels, and hopefully tapping into the incredible talent that is in the UMass system.

How will the University of Massachusetts Boston be connected to the Institute?

The University of Mass, Boston is a natural ally. Our goal is to have the campus breathe life into the building. There will be a number of places where we will be able to do things together. In addition to the university, you have the Massachusetts Archives with a real treasure of important pieces of not only Massachusetts history, but American history as well. There are few places on this earth that host as much teaching and education as we have with the University of Massachusetts, Boston, the Mass Archives, and the Kennedy Library. It is incredible to contemplate.

How will the immediate community of Dorchester as well as the larger Boston community be able to utilize the institute?

I think we are doing programs that the entire community will participate in. We will be the kind of institution who invites the neighborhood to participate and help, and we also want to help. I grew up in Dorchester. I know this community well. The number of people in South Boston and Dorchester who have said 'let me know how I can help' is incredible.

Kennedy had a very special connection to Dorchester, you know. We want to make sure we are able to keep that connection alive.

Why Columbia Point?

You know from reading [his memoir] True Compass how important the sea was to him. I think it's fitting that we have the institute at Columbia Point. For that reason, we also want to be part of a community who insists on superb stewardship of the water.

I was at the senator's house three years ago at a meeting in his living room. The Institute came up. Someone in the room said, 'this is terrific, you should put this at (you know, X school).' The senator hesitated for a few seconds and then said, "No. I want it at UMass Boston, those are my people."

Tea Party Movement Crashes Boston

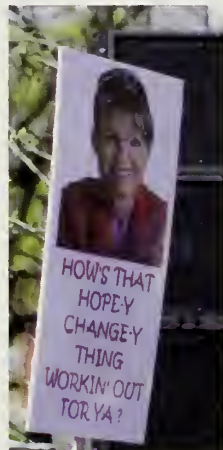

Former vice presidential candidate Sarah Palin and the Tea Party Express rolled into Boston on April 14 to deliver their message of political overhaul. While the exact number is disputed, thousands came out, young and old alike, to both support and protest the ideas of the Tea Party Movement.

FAR RIGHT: The legend herself, Sarah Palin, addresses the crowd gathered at Boston Common.

ABOVE RIGHT: One of many songs written by Tea Party Movement supporters, sung by the woman in the star-spangled jacket and white ruffled shirt, and a male who was lost among the flags.

LEFT: As the yearbook staff made their way through the crowd, many of these yellow flags, known as the Gadsden Flag, which has been popular at Tea Party Movements since 2009.

RIGHT: The band that played various marches, military themes and patriotic tunes before the rally began.

Art Capstone Show

Many senior art students exhibited work created during the semester in Liz Marran's capstone course. The show was held in the Harbor Art Gallery and was titled "Dynamite Delicious."

The exhibit featured work by Yasmeen Abdallah, Gillian Canavan, Ryan Czekanski-Moir, Sarah Delory, Tracy Drane, Tim Duffy, Kaia Finn, Ryan Foley, Nick Hough, Nanaka Hayashi, Myung Ah Kang, Lisa Lane, Yubin Lee, Nick Parisi, Nancy Righi, Matt Ross, Maria Sanchez, Erik Sundell, Claretta Taylor Webb, Alicia Wood and Lilian Wong, and it ran from May 11 until May 27.

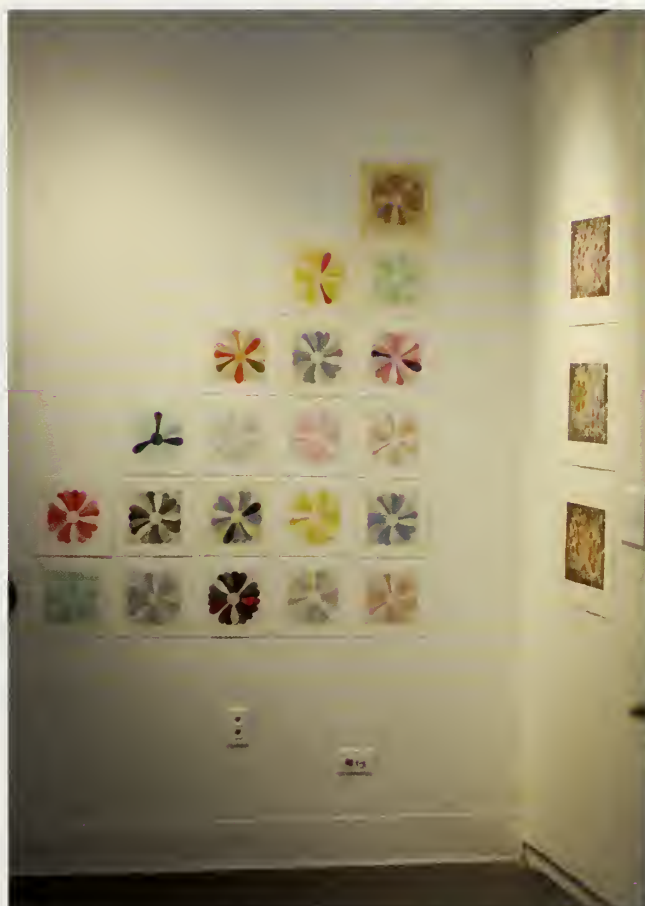

ABOVE: Exhibiting student Taylor Webb dances along with the digital component of one of her fellow capstone student's projects.

NEXT PAGE: Photos of a few of many pieces that were on display. Artistic styles ranged from digital media, to abstract painting, to mixed media and even a pair of underwear with words printed on it.

The UMass Boston Yearbook staff would like to thank:

Donna Neal, UMass Boston Yearbook adviser

Michelle Sidwell at Walsworth Publishing

Edson Bueno, The Mass Media

Lilly O'Flaherty, Lux

Wil Kilburn, UMass Boston Communications

Alan Wickstrom and Daniel Campagna from

UMass Boston Athletics

DaVor/Herff Jones Photography

and all 2010 graduating seniors who got their portraits taken

About the 2010 Beacon:

This edition of the UMass Boston Beacon was produced in Adobe InDesign CS4 on an iMac. The cover, divider, headline and senior name font is Artistamp; the body text font is Minion Pro and the caption font is Alps.

The cover and dividers were designed by Editor Amanda Huff.

The Yearbook staff is Editor Amanda Huff and Photo Editor
Alexander Toorish.

The list of graduates printed in this book was the list printed in the graduation booklet on June 4, 2010. Erraneous listings and missing names are not the fault of the Yearbook staff. As well, many middle names were shortened to initials for space and congruency.
